Coffee Blends

There is a large diversity of coffee plants that vary from continent to continent, from height of the plantation above sea level, weather, soil and various other factors. However two beans' qualities correspond to the vast majority of coffee consumed around the world: The ARABICA bean and the CANEPHORA bean most known as ROBUSTA.

ARABICA COFFEE: it has a caffeine content between 1.2% to 1.8%. The plant grows mostly in the tropical and subtropical regions in altitudes between 800 and 2500 meters above sea level. It is quite delicate and needs looking after. It offers a smooth, delicate and aromatic coffee and varieties of Arabicas are used in the finest coffees such as in LEX SAPOR.

ROBUSTA COFFEE: it has a higher caffeine content between 3% and 5%. ROBUSTA coffee can literally be translated into "Robust" as the beans need much less care than Arabicas. However it is more acid, bitter and rougher in taste and less aroma. However it is quite flexible: it can be used in more economical mixtures with Arabica. Nonetheless LEX SAPOR Robusta coffee is itself unique and of the highest quality so you can be sure that even if used in a blend with Arabica beans you shall always get a very exquisite espresso.
